

To whom it may concern:

We were lucky to encounter Rodney Wilhite in our search for remodeling advice. Not only did he come into our home and assess the ideas of a previous designer, within days he was able to tell us that the design which we had paid for would not work due to various beam sizes and city codes. While we were thankful we had not pursued that idea further, we were at a loss as to what to do next. In discussion with Rodney, where he asked us great questions and really sought to know our needs, we were able to see beyond our dead end. He was never pushy but always helpful. Never outlining what he would do but assisting us in finding the solution that was right for us. After that discussion, he was back with several ideas. We loved the addition and asked him to pursue the design.

Once the design was done we bid out the work and loved the fact that with Riley Palmer Construction, Rodney would also be our General Contractor. He was diligent, conscientious, imaginative, intelligent and knew his stuff. His ideas for the little things that came up were always perfect. His attention to the detail of our 82 year old house made the new construction a seamless addition to the old.

In addition, his crew were productive and hardworking. From the brick mason with thirty years experience to the framing crew who was onsite working from 7:30 until 4:30 every day. The job foreman, Keith Wilson, was available to us 24 hours a day, seven days a week. Courteous and clean, they respected our home and our privacy. Rodney followed up on his crew and dealt with issues effectively as they arose.

While we expected the remodeling to be a huge and painful disruption, we found that working with Rodney was so pleasant that we were sad to have to say our good-byes when the project was done.

Sincerely,
